President's Message

It's the First of May and I'm sitting here trying to figure out the weather so I can go ride. The parks have been very fast at closing the trails around here so any rain makes it hard to plan. Hope the rest of you are finding it easier.

Not a lot of club news. We had a scare over the endurance ride and had to make a lot of changes. I still don't know all of them but bits and pieces keep coming in and I think it should be a nice ride. I hope you have made plans to ride or help. Call Peggy or Trilby and let them know.

Our meeting is setup to have a speaker this month, Nutrena and next month at Julie Suhr's with a horse masseuse and the proverbial hot dog bar-b-que. Plan on attending and if you need a ride let me know. I have a large passenger van that seats 11.

July is up for grabs, any ideas? I was thinking of a ride at Calero with a meeting afterwards. August is the same, no plan so think one up.

We have no plans that I know of for a Poker Ride. Without someone jumping up and wanting to do the planning and work it looks like a no go. The club requires volunteers to put such an event on so think about it. The same goes for the Quicksilver Fall Ride. We have no manager so no ride. It's the usual deal where the time and effort has to come from the members to do these things but everyone is busy doing what it takes to just survive and ride their horses. Of note is the number of members putting on rides separate from the club. We are very active as a group riding and managing rides but it falls down when we get to the part about QSER. Personally I find the club to be a great place to learn so someone who wants the experience of being a ride manager and contribute to the well being of the sport should volunteer...the rest of us are here to support them and see to it that they succeed. Enough said.

El Presidente Steve

RIDE STORY

Every ride is a lesson for me. Still. And I imagine, that for most endurance riders, no matter how long they ride, it remains that way as long as you ride. High Desert Classic was my first pull. I knew it had to happen sooner or later, but the disappointment was greater than I anticipated.

Tank and I had a great morning for the most part. He sped along so well at Cuyama, I thought I could let him go a little faster in the morning, although we still walked up the long, long hill. What got me was attempting to have a conversation with a rider whose horse had a big, floaty, slow trot that ate up the miles. Tank paddled mightily to keep up with her and when he couldn't keep up that way, cantered some to catch up. A great mistake on my part. People who know Tank seem to think he has the ability to complete middle of the pack. But so far this year, I have had no time to do much in the way of conditioning in between rides. He's done one day at East Mojave, one day at Cuyama and maybe a half a dozen rides on home trails. Plenty to do our normal back of the pack speed, but not enough, obviously for to keep up.

I really didn't feel we were going all that fast. In fact, 6:25 hours for 35 miles is pretty slow. Tank pulsed down immediately at the 35-mile lunch stop, but when I went back for his CRI, he went up to 80 after his trot out and stayed there. The vet and I decided I would hang out for an extra half an hour and see how it went. After all, it was only 2:00. I had oodles of time to walk in. But after the extra wait, I could see just looking down at Tank's chest that he was still at 80. I plodded over to Susan McCartney and said I thought it was "Game Over." We didn't even get to trot out again as she verified he was indeed still at 80 just standing there. It was our first trailer ride back to camp and I do have to admit I teared up on the ride home. I spent the time kicking myself for not having had the time in between rides to condition. Or at least condition some at the canter, which I've not done with Tank.

A couple of theories from others popped up as I sat in camp that night ... "maybe he's coming down with something" ... "maybe he got something from the ticks you found on him at Cuyama." I did hear him cough yesterday. But he's been running around bucking and kicking in the pasture like a maniac so I don't think he's sick. I haven't gotten a blood panel done yet. But I supposed I should. However, I just plain old think we went too fast for how much I've been able to condition this year.

The trail was really cool. And the views were outstanding from the top of the mountain. Snow-covered peaks all around as far as you could see. The sky was so clear and beautiful and it was absolutely the perfect temperature. We had a great spaghetti dinner on Friday night and Fajitas! on Saturday. Mmmmmmm .... The ride management was great and the volunteers rocked.

I was hoping to get that cool blanket for completing all three days of the series, but it's not to be this year--maybe next year.

I'm not sure what my next ride is ... might go to Quicksilver. It all depends on how much time I spend finishing the Endurance Guide and how much time I can find to ride before then. James hasn't been ridden since Cuyama either so neither of the boys is ready for those hills, I don't think. I'd like to go to Ft. Shelbourne, but not sure I can get away for that one either. But I'll see you all on the trail soon, somehow!

:) Jackie and Tank

A HORSE STORY

In January I bought a very pretty 11 year old NSH mare, All Keyed Up, whose behavior does not reflect her name—she is a real sweetie. After a couple of months I decided that caring for three horses is just too much for me (endless putting on and taking off of blankets, slogging out to feed twice a day in 3 different feeders in our windy, exposed location, etc.) so I started looking around for a good home for her. Since she is so well behaved I thought she might do well as an NATRC horse and started talking her up to my friends. My first attempt was successful up to a point.

A friend who was looking for an extra horse for friends and family tried her and liked her a lot but she has a very dominant mare that Ally would be pastured with. Since Ally had already basically wapped the dickens out of my little mare we had to pass that really nice ranch home by.

Another friend was looking for a horse for her husband, a beginning rider, to start doing NATRC. We met for a ride and she liked Ally so she took her home for her husband to try. That was on a Sunday and the very next Friday they brought her to the NATRC ride at Ft. Ord where the husband competed in a large class and Ally was awarded a 4th place ribbon. They gave me a check the next day so now Ally has moved uptown and has her own stall, paddock and a covered arena for those wet days☺

HORSE SITTER CHECKLIST

If you plan to leave your horse in the hands of a sitter, you'll need to equip him or her to handle any situation that might come up, so you can enjoy your trip worry-free. Use our countdown checklist to make sure you remember every detail.

By Karen Hayes, DVM

FOUR WEEKS IN ADVANCE

Schedule routine maintenance. Take care of all routine vet and farrier visits to catch any potential problems-in-the-making-and so your sitter won't have to bother with them. This will leave him or her free to concentrate on day-to-day care-and crisis management, if necessary.

Tip: Schedule a time when you'll be available to discuss any concerns you may have regarding your horse's health. That will make it easier to catch any problems before you leave town.

Tell your vet you'll be away. While your vet is there, give him or her the dates you'll be leaving your horse in a sitter's care. Ask him or her to ensure that your horse will get any needed veterinary care in your absence. Assure your vet (in writing, if necessary) that payment will be made as soon as you get back. Make a refundable down payment, if requested.

Tips: Give your vet (in writing) specific instructions to be used in the event of a crisis, and ask that this information be included prominently in your horse's medical records. For example, if you're adamantly against colic surgery, make it clear you'll agree to any medical treatment for your horse if he colics, but if surgery is required, you authorize your vet to euthanize your horse. Ask your vet to include any major-medical or mortality insurance information-including contact numbers-in your horse's medical records, in case your provider needs to be contacted.

THREE WEEKS IN ADVANCE

Arrange for emergency transport. Make sure your trailer and towing vehicle are in tiptop shape. Fill the gas tank; put air in the tires; tighten the lug nuts; secure the hitch; clean the floor mats, etc. If your sitter will need to borrow someone else's rig, make sure it's available and in good repair. Leave cash-in $20 bills or smaller-to cover trip expenses.

TWO WEEKS IN ADVANCE

Stock up on feed. Have plenty of everything your horse needs on hand-hay, grain, supplements, daily dewormer, etc.-so your sitter won't have to buy more. Arrange it all in one place, clearly labeled.

Tips: Use stay-on, waterproof labels. Apply labels on cans-not lids, which may get switched. Remove any feed your horse doesn't need to avoid confusion. Provide an uncluttered work surface for your sitter to prepare feed and supplements.

ONE WEEK IN ADVANCE

Leave written instructions. Detail feeding and nonfeeding chores, organized in the order in which your sitter will do them.

Tips: Leave one large instruction sheet, rather than several small ones-a big piece of smooth cardboard works great. Use a thick-tipped marking pen so your writing is easy to read, and won't smudge or run if it gets wet. Post the sheet on the wall in the food-prep area. Match the feed substance name to the one on the label so there's no confusion. Be clear and concise so your sitter doesn't have to wade through extraneous words to get to the bottom line.

Leave medication instructions. Store medications and supplies (such as gauze pads, needles, syringes, etc.) in one location, such as in a metal lunchbox in the fridge. Write down location of medications/supplies, plus detailed instructions on how and when to use them, on the main instruction sheet described above.

Tips: Show your sitter how to treat your horse, and have him or her do it at least once while you're there, so you know it's being done safely and properly.

Leave contact information. On a separate sheet of paper, list all important contact information: where you can be reached (plus an alternate number, just in case); the name and number of your veterinarian (plus his or her after-hours number, and another vet's number, just in case); your farrier; your equine insurance company (if applicable); and a neighbor (preferably one who knows your horses).

Tips: If you'll be hard to reach, tell your sitter to leave daily messages on your answering machine or service. That way, you can call and check for messages when it's convenient. If your horse has mortality and/or major-medical insurance, make four copies of the provider's contact information. Give one copy to your sitter; take one with you; post one in the barn; and leave one inside your house. That way, you or your sitter will definitely be able to contact your provider in case of a crisis.
